The text of the whole article in the Cycle, which is extracted elsewhere, is the assertion that "all there is up to the present in actual evidence is the popular attack and its dire results." It would be impossible to crain more falsehood into as many words. There is infinitely more than this in evidencechiefly and most unquestionably, the utter neglect of Chun How to take the mecessary precautions to avert the outbreak-while it is clearly shown that the outbreak itself was not a popular attack, but the result of a carefully matured plot, in which there is no doubt many of the leading officials twelve months; in default, case to be brought were implicated. After stating a falsehood in general terms—but one eminently calculated to mislead readers away from China, who have not the opportunity of thoroughly investigating the facts—the Oycle tells dalf the truth in detail. It assumes garden, the property of Kam Afoon, at 4 a.m. that "pressure from outside" was brought on August 2nd. to bear on the mob, notwithstanding that the massacre was a " popular attack"; it also admits that some officials have acquired "an abstract objection to foreigners in the country." Now an abstract expection to foreigners in the country when it takes the concrete form of butchering them, is not quite such a light matter as it is desired to make out, especially when there is almost overwhelming avidence that this "dislike" has been carefully fostered by the officials. But one acknowledgement made in the article under notice is quite sufficient to show the speciousness of the arguments, it contains. It is acknowledged that precautions might have been taken, supposing the design of the massacre to have been known. The objections of the Memorialists have indeed been concentrated on that part of the new eystem which deals with imports. Inasmuch as they foresee a prospect of great benefit from the mode proposed of dealing withthe experts, and have nothing to pay or to risk in return, they have apparently thought it unnecessary to offer any comment. DIRECTORS:

consequence of the involuntary impulses of a generous nature. We rapidly sum up "the miseries of the victims and we loudly call for vengennee. Upon whom punishment is to be he inflicted is for the moment a question of secondary importance. The crime stands out pre-eminent and alone, weare morally convinced hat there was no cause for it, that there can be no possible justification or publistion of it, and Thos. Hunt & Co. Apply to n') we desire is to see somebody made answer. T. S. HOOK, SON & Co. n') we desire is to see somebody made answerable for it and forced to explate it so far as personal suffering can atone for the commission of foul wrong. But with time comes reflection, and instead of olamouring for vengeance, we demand careful and minute investigation. It is natural that first we should abandon our habitual calmness, but as reason resumes her away, we are gradually led to admit that evidence has to be examined and weighed. and that while it is essential that the guilty shall pay the penalty of their crimes, and the careless or timid pay the penalty of their negligence or cowardice, it is no less essential that those who have been guiltless shall be acquitted and reinstated in whatever estimation they before enjoyed. Few will deny that the position of a judge is more dignified that of a violent partizan. Integrity is his portion and proper virtue, and that he may plant his judgment as upon even ground, he should beware of hard constructions and forced inferences. So Bicon describes the attitude of a judge, and the sooner we assume this position with regard to any facts whatecever, the sconer shall we arrive at a just decision. Oriminal courts are unfortunately too often occupied in the investigation of crimes the possibility of which makes us doubt whether humanity is an advance upon the organisation of what we call the lower animals. yet the tribunals that carefully sift every scrap of testimony that can be collected from far and near are not commonly stigmatised as " cynical, servile and cowardly." Nor when they demand proof that such or such a person is a murderer are they usually said to " plead he cause of the assassin." This however is the Isinguage used by certain persons with regard to those who still maint in a position, of] expectancy, awaiting full evidence before they pass a verdict of guilty upon all those at present charged with complicity in the Tientsin outrage.

We regret that one or two violent writers in the search for popularity should so damage our common cause. They do not represent the not for indisci minute slaughter or for inflammajory comments upon past events, but for the discovery of all the facts nearly or remotely bearing on the case. ... And this we assume as our position. We laive already indicated certain causes which no I THE HOUSE and OFFICES, No. 4, Gough doubt operated upon the common people of | . . Street, lately occupied by Messre. A. Will Tientein and rendered a usually inoffensive com | KINSON & Co. Apply to munity prone to be instigated to acts of almosunparalleled brutality. There can be no doubt. that the ineligators of the outrage were men of vast influence, but men whose position was each that they had everything to gain and THE-very desirable Business PREMISES. nothing to lose from the destruction of foreigners. All that there is up to the present in and Wellington Street, at present occupied by have been most carefully kept, and there is not kow, and are prepared to grant Insurances at actual evidence is the popular attack and its Mesers. A. BOYER & Co. Apply to dire results. We justly assume that pressure DOUGLAS-LAPHAIK & Co. from outside was brought to bear upon the mob, and we then meet the great question of motive which is utterly lost sight of by those who now endeavour to pander to feelings which the same persons are diligently striving to call into existence. There are certain natives who once held lucrative No. 63, between Mesers. JOHN BURD & Co. a offices from which they have been removed, or who have failed to secure due recognition of their real or funcied merits, or who finally have i conceived an abstract objection to the presence of foreigners in the country, that are in opposition to the policy now pursued at Peking, and are anxious to gratily a spite against foreigners even supposing the attainment of their wishes should convulse the empire to its very centre. It is not unreasonable to suppose | in their own Boats, and to receive the same on that this last contingency may be one of the storage in first class GRANTTE GODOWNS most powerful motives, if not actually the most on moderate terms. powerful. Now it would be vain to attempt to conceal the fact that such a party exists in China; and moreover is a very influential one. Amongst its numbers the persons. really guilty of the Tientsin massacre are than folly to bring a sweeping charge against all the officials or all the literary men, as if those who are in office are not above ail things interested in maintaining the status quo. For it is to be remembered that the presence of foreigners at a port necessitates a large and well remunerated staff of native officials whose position and revenues depend upon foreigners. After an event many previous circumstances are remembered that seem to have pointed to it. but these circumstances are really only important so far as they undoubtedly led to actual apprehension. We likewise apply the test of motive to the charge of criminal negligence brought against the magistrates at Tientain, and while we acknowledge that after the massacre it appeared that precautions might have been taken supposing the design to have been known, we must likewise confess that no body of persons could have been more directly interested in preventing a popular demonstration againt foreigners than the fficials employed in the district at the time. Our demand is therefore for punishment-punishment of the most marked character, such punishment as will make the cars of all who bear of it tingle, but previous trial and investigation. If it should take twenty years to ferret out the guilty, that twenty years will be well spent if it assures us that no one implicated in the crime shall escape. No less entisfactory ought it to be if the more tedious the investigation the less should be chance of punishment falling on the innocent. " The mills of the Lord grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small." Let us drag truth from the bowels of the earth, but let us be at least certain that we have got hold of it:

lamentable that so many persons ignorant of everything that should qualify them to lead public opinion, should yet set themselves up as guides in the discussion of important questions. If any one species of ignorance is more remarkable than another in the productions of writers for the local press, it is ignorance of the law of nations. We can all feel horror at an outmee, and we can all in one way or another express that horror. But when discussion passes this point, the writers lose themselves in a mazo of absurdity and obscurity. We state the case in the broadest and simplest manner possible Franch demands for reparation shall be consiwill be no ground whatsover for war. To talk about war now, to advise it as the one necessary solution, is mere folly. A grievous wrong has to be atoned for, the question is—bow? Those, who are suilty in the first degree must be discovered and made examples of. Those who are guilty in the second degree-whose real or asserted negligence permitted what the others caused must be punished each according to his guilt. Theless of property will have to bemade good, and finally it is probable that a material guarantee for the future will be demanded. With regard to the first three points there will be no difficulty. If the latter enters into the French demands it may be such as will be readily granted, or it may be such as no state could grant unless forced to do so. In this latter case, and in this only, war would of course be the final solution, but it may be anticipated that while all reasonable concessions will be made without other than diplomatic interference. France will not endervour to force dra Terrace. picasures upon the Chinese government which Pour Le Consul de France, Le Chanceller, under aimilier circumetance would in Europabe-held to be unreasonable. It may be that another and final war with
